About the Seminar

The world as a whole, the past twenty years has constituted an era of unprecedented economic growth. It is certain that more people have been involved in and affected by the process of development during this period of time. And various research studies have pointed out that the rate of increase in incomes has been higher and more sustained than ever before. Yet the end of the period has found the world community more conscious than before of the disparities between countries and between groups within countries. An appraisal of the performance of the less developed countries has to be made in the global setting because these areas constitute the market for most of the exports and the source of much of the capital, both in the form of expertise-and technology and in the form of plant and equipment.

Keeping this in mind the Department of Economics, Assam Don Bosco University is organizing the National Seminar (Virtual) on “Contemporary Economic Issues in Developing countries”. The seminar aims to provide an ideal platform for the academicians, researchers, and representatives from the industry to deliberate on key research paper on various contemporary issues and challenges of developing countries, that are relevant for policymakers both from the point of policy formulation and successful implementation of the policies to address various contemporary economic issues, disparities between countries and between groups within countries.
